Best formal dress style for large bust

While I love the look of a backless dress or teen-small straps, the best way I can think of attending any special relationship is in an outfit that makes me feel comfortable and in a bra that fully supports (strapless usually doesn't cut it). There will be no sneaky tugging, hiking, or customization. If I want to be on the dance floor (I often want to be on a dance floor), I should be able to lift my arms above my head or bow around without any distractions. So with my one rule in mind, I went hunting for cocktail dresses for big busts in an abundance of styles. Some show cleavage, some don't. Some are floor-length and others are pretty leggy. The one common denominator: You don't have to worry about concealing a single bra strap. If it's just as important to you as it is for me, keep browsing. When choosing formal and semi-formal dresses for busty body types, the fashion goal is to balance your figure and achieve an hourglass look. Choose styles that will accentuate your best feature, such as halter-top dresses, v-neck gowns, and dresses with scoop necklines as they'll help elongate your torso. Busty prom dresses with ruching at the waist, a belted dress, or an a-line party dress with a trendy color-block pattern provide a fun way to add definition to your waistline. Unique skirts and hemlines are another great way to divert attention to your lower body. To balance out your silhouette, try adding volume to your hips with a long prom dress with a mermaid skirt, tiered layered skirt, or trumpet skirt. A short semi-formal party dress with a laser-cut hem or high-low party dress is a trendsetting way to visually distract focus to your lower body. Whatever your personal preference, you'll find a variety of figure-flattering dresses for busty body types to choose from at Simply Dresses. When dressing a busty figure, it's best to avoid any dresses that add volume to an already voluminous bustline. It's best to refrain from picking evening dresses with ruching at the bustline, ruffles, popovers, or flounce accents on the bodice, as these features tend to attract attention and can make your torso appear larger. Instead, focus on styles that will highlight your curves and create an overall balanced look. Though trendy, off-the-shoulder, cold-shoulder, and strapless prom dresses aren't typically ideal for busty figures. These styles do not always provide adequate coverage or support and tend to draw attention upwards, creating the illusion of a fuller torso. Formal gowns and prom dresses for busty figures should always help achieve that highly sought-after ultra-feminine hourglass silhouette. What body type am I? Read about the most common types below and our tips for formal dressing each form to look its best. Remember, it doesn't matter what size or shape you are. There's a perfect black tie dress that will flatter you and make you feel beautiful! Apple Body Type The Apple Body Type has commonly slim legs and thighs, but with a wider torso frame and rounder mid-section. Dressing an apple body forms best, look for pieces that create a defined waist around your midriff. A plunging neckline like a sweetheart shape or deep v will look beautiful on you. Like an off-the-shoulder style. If you're attending a cocktail party, take the chance to show your legs as you tend to have beautiful gams. For a formal event, opting for a dramatic strapless ball gown with plenty of hull volume in an A-line structure will create more volume for your frame. For example, this stunning navy pleated prom dress with a sparkling embelliced belted rich waist. Busty Body Type If you've been blessed with a fuller chest, by all means, flaunt it in a fitted look with slim waist! The Busty Body Type has a larger chest, but closer hips. The key to striking balance is to look for pieces that emphasize and support your chest and also flatter your bottom half. A dress with an A-line prom skirt will help bring some flame and proportion. Another good option is a mermaid prom dress, which naturally accentuates your figure with a short rich bodice. This fitted style also has a nipped-in waist and flares dramatically at the bottom. You can go shopping for skirts that skim your waist and legs. It can create a figure that is sexy and flattering. You can have fun and choose any style of neck you like, such as halter or plunging. Make the most of your torso and add curves! Avoid very high necklines on your search. They'll make you look even bustier and won't provide a good style. This fitted lace gown is the perfect choice with its plunging v-neck and flared ending. Hourglass Body Type The Hourglass Body Type is easily identifiable - you will have a narrow waist with a fuller chest and hips that are about equal in width. It creates a symmetrical curve on your upper and mid-body. It's a very desirable form in the fashion world! You'll look stunning in figure-hugging styles that show off this beautiful natural silhouette. Look for body-conscious jersey fabric prom dresses. This design with an open back is particularly attention-grabbing. A high neckline will show your hourglass figure even more, as well as a dress in a block color. Avoid oversized styles that drown out your natural figure. Search for pieces that add curves and have a slim waistline. Skirts can be bodycon or flared at the end, with a long train if desired. Pear Body Type A Pear Body type has a nouter upper half (shoulders) with wider hips, thighs, This body shape is easy to flatter. All you need is to post on top of nice details. Choose a flowing skirt to your bottom half that skim gently over your bottom half. Pear-shaped body types look gorgeous in a halter neck or plunging body dresses. This includes a style that features beadwork on your upper half to draw more attention upwards. We love this gorgeous chiffon gown option for pear-shaped women. One thing to try to steer clear of is dresses that are completely body-hugging. Always opt for evening gowns with a loose or flared prom skirt. An attention-grabbing body can form your focal point for your formal appearance, so make sure you choose a top that really makes a statement. Choose an A-line style with a pretty off-the-shoulder bodice for a black-tie gala. Petite Body Type The Petite woman is often shorter in stature and with a slim, short upper half. To make the best of this body type, try choosing a beautiful dress in a block color. Petite women look great in single-tone prom styles because they don't break your body. These dresses draw the eye to the entire length of the gown, prolonging your silhouette. One other style to consider for petite shapes? Dresses with a higher belted waist that will give the illusion of longer legs and height to your look. For semi-formal events, you can also wear shorter length prom gowns (knee length) to point out your legs. Slim body type The Slender Body Type, also known as Athletics or Tall, can be identified as a rectangular frame and a square shoulder and midsection. Fortunately, it's easy to add some soft curves with the right prom dress. Look for designs that subtly embrace and bust the hips with a narrowed waist or flared tail. For example, this mermaid style prom gown with a fitted one-shoulder design. Sweetheart necklaces help create sexy curves and femininity to your figure, especially when coupled with a mermaid dress or trumpet skirt. Try to stay away from a column of dresses (dresses that are straight up and down). When shopping, select a fun look that creates texture or volume. You should try adding some curves to look your best. A tinned rich waist and a ballgown skirt will also have a similar effect on the eye. More Dress Options & Ideas Don't forget – pear, apple, hourglass, busty and athleticism are just some of the typical body types out there. If you don't necessarily fit into one of these body categories, don't panic! You can use your own meetings to decide which aspects you want to highlight and hide. A good rule of thumb is to try to balance your body by concealing where you are the widest and highlighting your narrow ends. Take your own figure as the first sign. When in doubt, a mermaid prom dress or trumpet style is the best option. This, of course, creates an elegant hourglass silhouette with minimal hype.
